Fun Facts

- Latvian Fridrich Cander (1887-1933) was an inventor who worked on the theory and design of jet engines and rockets.
- The first recorded display of a traditionally decorated Christmas tree was traced back to Riga, Latvia in the year 1510.
- On May 1, 2004, Latvia became a member of the European Union.

Latvia boasts a sparkling landscape of more than 4,000 lakes; a third of its territory of 24,000 square miles is covered in forest and is a haven for wildlife.

In 1988, part of the population helped to form a human protest chain of two million people linking Tallinn (capital of Estonia), the Latvian capital Riga, and Vilnius (capital of Lithuania), symbolizing a common desire of the Baltic people for independence from the Soviet Union. This was achieved in 1991, and Latvia experienced rapid economic growth. In May 2004, it became a member of the European Union. The capital, Riga, has especially enjoyed all the benefits of this success with sophisticated cafés, restaurants, and shops providing color and animation. Founded in 1201, Riga was once called the "Paris of the North." Situated on the Daugava River, 13 miles inland, it soon became the most important town in the Baltic area; its old quarter, Vecriga, is surrounded by ramparts and conjures up visions of the past.

A local Latvian dish to try is deep-fried fish filets stuffed with mushrooms and anchovy; cabbage is a year-round staple. When shopping, look for Baltic amber, a precious reminder of the region's primordial roots.
